Use of a bioengineered skin substitute in a human airway study. Bioengineered skin substitutes (BSS) have received much attention recently because they offer a predictable means for prevention and treatment of skin ulcers in patients with ischemia, spinal cord injury, or extensive burns. A comparison of the efficacy of BSS and standard bandage treatment of exudate from a human airway study is described. Whole-blood specimens were obtained from nine subjects with healthy skin prior to three applications of BSS or bandage treatment of exudate. Of the eight bandaged sites, seven showed a marked increase in exudate. The biophysical data from the nine subjects indicated no statistically significant differences in total protein concentration, total cell count, or pH values. Statistical analysis using the Wilcoxon two sample test showed BSS to be more efficacious than bandage treatment.

Q: DataContext changes after updating generic List I have a grid view, which displays a list of entities. The grid view also contains a search field, which searches the database. When I search for a text in the search field, the list below is binded to the search text. The entity is set as a DataContext for the specific gridview and I use the following code to check the changed property if (Context.Entry(Product).State == System.Data.Entity.EntityState.Detached) { dbEntities db = new dbEntities(); db.Products.Attach(Product); } My Search method is: private void SearchProducts(string myQuery) { dbEntities db = new dbEntities(); var lst = new List(db.Products); IQueryable qry = db.Products.Where(product => product.ProductName.Contains(myQuery) ||
